Five Things to Know About Using the NCSU Libraries as a Distance Learner

1. The library website is your gateway to a world of information
   The library has a rich collection of online information resources to support your academic research, including thousands of e-journals and hundreds of article databases. You can access any of these information resources by logging in with your Unity ID and password.

2. You can request home delivery of books and web delivery of articles
   Need books and journal articles you can’t find online? You are not limited to our online resources. There are approximately four million books and journals at NCSU available to you! Plus, if we don’t have a book or journal, we will borrow it from another library to get it to you. The whole world of library collections is available to you. All you have to do is fill out a request form.

3. Course Reserves
   Course Reserves is an online collection of class readings, tests, and notes used by instructors to share materials with their students.

4. Librarians want to help you!
   Finding and using information can be challenging sometimes, and all library users have questions about making the most of online search tools, or finding the right book or article for an assignment. Librarians are here to help you most of the day and night, seven days a week, via phone (toll-free), chat, and email.

5. You can visit the NCSU Libraries
   If you are in the area, we’d love for you to visit! If not, there are many other libraries in the Triangle area or across North Carolina that you have can use as an NCSU student.
